THE DAILY EVENING THEREBOADES. THIS DELPHA, THIS DAILY DE 1804.

YMAT IS THE SILITARY VALUE OF ATLANTA?

For three months, less a week, a column, rivalng in strength the great Army of the Potomac, is been forcing its way towards the city of Atnta, in Georgia, its progress being disputed at ory step by the second areat army of the Coneracy. What is the object whose possession stifics such an expenditure of both offensive of defensive force, when either antagonist needs of defensive force, when either antagonist needs very man and every gun it can muster, in front f the Confederate Capital? In the first place, it Atlanta itself—a modern, well-built city, now pronching its twenty-first year, but still sooner reach its freedom birthday. Laid out in a circles form, with a radius of about a mile, it consists within its strongly introched circumference may that the war has brought an accretion of a some that the war has brought an accretion of a searth to its numbers,) a population of about wenty thousand sonis.

From its protected situation, deep in the inte-tor of the Confederacy, it was chosen at the out at as a great military depot of supplies and of material of war, and, furthermore, as a great military workshop. In this respect it has no equal in the central zone of the Confederacy. It at the Richmond of the West. Here are avecals, leanning formace, will be making about the the Kechnond of the West. Here are arsenals, andries, furnaces, rolling mills, machine shops, coratories, and factories, which have been sily supplying the Confederacy with municions war for the past three years. Here the finest d largest rolling mill in the South has been ming out iron rails for roads, and armorating for iron-clads, the latter in great abundance.

Here are factories for shot and shell, for piss, powder, cartridges, and percussion caps, for n-carriages, for small arms, for equipments gons and harnesses, shoes and clothing, and ragons and harnesses, shoes and clothing, and or many other purposes useful to the Rebal comissariat. Here also, are railroad repair-shops incalculable value to the enemy. At least two as the control of the control an spare his single city. As a depot of supplies, to, as well as a manufactory, Atlanta has layed an important part. But doubtless most its stores and its completed goods have decady been prudentially removed.

Next, Atlanta is one of the chief railroad centres in the Confederacy. Northerly runs as Western and Atlantic road to Chattanoogatouthwesterly, the Atlanta, West Point, and contgomery road, connecting the former point with the capital of Alabama, thence with Mobile on the South, and with the whole Mississippicalley on the West. Southeasterly runs the important road to Macon, and thence to Savannah, asterly, the read to Augusta, and again to Saasterly, the read to Augusta, and again to Sa-annah and to Charleston. To these we shall resently refer. Besides these advantages, there is a topographi-

Besides these advantages, there is a topographial one of great importance. The chief military oint in all the mountain region of this vicinity is thattaneegs. That we must continue to hold in orce at all hazards. Its chief value, however, is a its defensive relation to East Tennessee, because from that point a column can easily throw tself on the communications of any hostile force which has passed through the mountain gaps to evage the interior of the State. Accordingly, it has key of all that lies behind its back; or, ather, it is the gate which closes up all that egion from assault. But for penetrating Central leorgia, Atlanta is the true starring-point.

Atlanta is as essentially the door of Georgia as Thatanooga of Tennessee. Till it is seized, only awalry can be used by us further south, and their raids must be hurried, temporary, often in-avairy can be used by us lutther south, and their raids must be hurried, temporary, often inteffective, and always hazardous. Even a movable infantry column, like that famous one of sherman which traversed Mississippi from Vicksburg to Meridian, at the opening of this year, would be marched in this quarter with great peril, as the army in Atlanta could harass its rear. Now, betwixt these two main points extend the Alleghanies, ridging the whole face of the country into a mountainous formation. Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, Taylor's Ridge, John's Mountain, Dug-Down Mountain, and other parallel ranges, break up the region lying between the Tennessee and the Chattahoochee.

So long as our base remains at Chattanooga, the enemy can always force us, in a southward march, to expend a campaign of several months in pressing him to Atlanta. We should have to fight him at long odds in such cyries as Buzzard's Roost, or turn him, as Shorman does, by flanking marches of one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles. But once carried, Atlanta is the heir raids must be hurried, temporary, often in-

hundred miles. But once car

hendred miles. But once carried, Atlanta is the new advanced position, and that labor is done once for all. To the southwest the country is still broken with the Alleghany chain, and due south of Atlanta is the formidable ridge of Pine Mountain. But, in the main, the region on the south and southeast is less rugged than that which Sherman's legions have already surmounted, and is less defensible.

From Atlanta branch out, like the sticks of a fan, important offensive lines in several southerly directions. First, lying not far from a common parallel of latitude, are the four important points of Selma, Montgomery, Opelika, and Columbus. Of these, Selma was once considered as very desirable; but its importance has doubtless been overrated. But Montgomery, the former capital of the Confederacy, is a point to be carried, and probably to be held. Opelika is of considerable value, both on account of its proximity to Atlanta, value, both on account of its proximity to Atlanta, and because of the juncture at that point of two

The capture of Opelika will absolutely sever ailroad communication between the eastern and western zones of the Confederacy. Indeed, it is probable that Rousseau has already cut the track this Monigomery railroad. But with Atlanta ars, the work could be made final instead of mporary. Lastly, on the east and southeast are theus, Milledgeville, Macon, and Augusta, the we latter important as railroad junctions, as all we hatter important as railroad junctions, as all tre in other respects.

Low, the retention of Atlanta by the enemy resets these different points in his rear. Its vesation absolutely uncovers some of them, if good retreats towards Augusta, as he probable will, the first series of four points is open to us without a strongle. If he retreats to the northwest, which is almost impossible, he uncovers all the others, which are still more important. It must be remembered that these rolling and fertile valleys on which Sherman is entering have been of great service to the Confederacy for supplies of food and forage, only surpassed, indeed, by Texas, Tennessee, and West Virginia. It must also be noted that Sherman, in taking Atlanta, plants himself directly across the road of communication between the Scaboard and the Valley States.

Expeditionary forces, sent out by that General, re in other respects.

communication between the Scaboard and the Valley States,

Expeditionary forces, sent out by that General, who has shown himself the most consummate master of morable columns, will sever the transmission of supplies by railroad, and cut off manufactories at other points, as he has already done at Rome and at Rosswell, and is about to do at Atlanta. At Rosswell, the largest cotten and woolen factory in the State has fallen into our hands. At Columbus, Macon, and Augusta are arsenals and ordnance factories, for cannon, rifles and pistols. At Augusta are the immense powder mills on which the Southern Confederacy almost solely depends. The vital resources of the Confederacy are all threatened by the capture of Atlanta, and their fall would almost destroy it. In the words of the Jew:—

"You take my life,

When you do take the me ans whereby I live," Now, perhaps, we may better see why the bloody fields of Resaca, Kenesaw, and Atlanta shoody fields of Resaca, Renessaw, and Atlanta have been fought, when the enemy would gladly touble his lines on the shore of the Appointation of the impaign, that an army has been kept employed, which is large enough, used defensively, to trouble us in Virginia, but yet not large enough, unformately for the enemy's schemes, to hold off the grasp of Sherman on Atlanta.

THE PEACE PROPOSITIONS IN EUROPE.

As soon as the Government of Denmark repeived the official information that neither the English Ministry nor even the tories would render them any aid in their war against the Gorman Powers, they perceived the necessity of opening direct negotiations with their opponents, opening direct negotiations with their opponents, in order to put an end to a war which could not possibly terminate in their favor. The youngest brother of the King, Prince John of Glacksburg, was therefore immediately sent to Prussia, to treat with the King and his Prime Minister, Bismark. We learn from Berlin that the Prince has passed through that city incognite, and at once repaired to Carlsbad, where the King and his Prime Minister are still staying.

This first step towards the conclusion of peace was soon followed by a second one. The Ministry, at the head of which was Bishop Mourad and which represented the uncompromising war party, was dismissed and a new one was formed under the presidency of Count Molike, who is reported to be a strong peace man, and one of the leaders of the ultra-reactionist party. It may be well to remark here, that in Benmark proper and in the Duchies a large and powerful portion of the aristocracy have been all the time opposed to the war.

In Denmark proper, which has bad for many OWN YOUR COLLIERIES In Denmark proper, which has had for many years a very democratic constitution, the aristocracy, chagrined at the loss of their privileges and influence, have regarded the estrangement which has taken place between the Danish and German sationalities as being to a large extent due to the rule of the Democratic party, and they are, in general, less opposed than the mass of the people to the German influence. In the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein some of the rule of the German influence.

Duchies of Schleswig and Hoistein some of the richest land-owners were, for the same reason, greatly opposed to the agitation of the nationality question, and therefore in favor of preserving the relation of the two Duchies with Denmark proper. In the Duchies, the Danish party are at present chilrely powerless. What they may attompt and be able to accomptish for Denmark will become apparent within the course of a few weeks or months. As yet we have, as to the intantions of the Danish King and the new Cabinet, nothing but the vaguest and most incredible rumors. One account says that the Government will make a last attempt to preserve the integrity of the Danish dominions, by offering to enter the German Confederation with the whole of Denmark proper.

German Confederation with the whole of Denimark proper.

The idea is not altogether never; one of the strongest war papers of Copenhagen, the Duybla-det, suggested some time ago, that if the Great Powers of Europe set aside the Treaty of London of 1852, the claim of Christian IX to the throne of Denmark proper also ceased, and the Danish people would be at liberty to decide whether they ple would be at therry to decide whether they preferred a republic, or to be annexed to Swedom and Norway, or to join the German Confederation. It is possible that Austria and Prussia might be favorably disposed towards the plan, believing that it might defeat the nationality movement, and the efforts for uniting all the German States into one German empire.

For the German people, the transfer of the

For the German people, the transfer of the panish fleet to the German Confederation would Danish fleet to the German Confederation would be a strong temptation; but a very large portion of the Liberal party, we believe, would altogether refuse to listen to it, considering the reception of a foreign national element as a great drawback to the development of the German nationality and the establishment of a German empire. England, France, and Russia would be considered to such a scheme and would man empire. England, France, and Russia would be equally opposed to such a scheme, and would undoubtedly unite to prevent it. From present appearances, this plan of a reception of all Denmark into the German Confederation stands but little chance of being adopted, though, should another effort be made to secure from the German Powers a recognition of the union of the two duchies with Denmark proper, this proposition would receive more favor than any other.

Another receive is that the King of Denmark would receive more favor than any other.

Another report is that the King of Denmark will endeavor to induce Prussia to annex Hoistein, Lauenburg, and South Schleswig as far as the Schlei (the frontier line offered by the Danes at the recent London Conference), and to consent to the incorporation of the rest of Schleswig with Denmark. Although Herr von Bismark has recently wen the reputation of being one of the shrewdest as well as most unscrupulous of European statesmen, it may well be doubted whether he will be daring enough to outrage the public opinion of all Europe by such a course.

But while the character of the peace propositions made by Denmark still remains a secret, we are again assured that peace will undoubtedly be soon concluded. England still continues her efforts to come to an understanding with France.

efforts to come to an understanding with France The last document from the latter power is not so absolutely pacific as those which preceded it, for it very distinctly hints at complications that may arise out of the Danish question; at the same time, however, it continues to profess the deepest interest in the solution of that question, in con-formity with the principle of the sovereignty of every nationality.
